

Frame 1

Jason suffers from mental illnesses and drug addiction. He is a frequent patient at social services and health agencies.

Frame 2

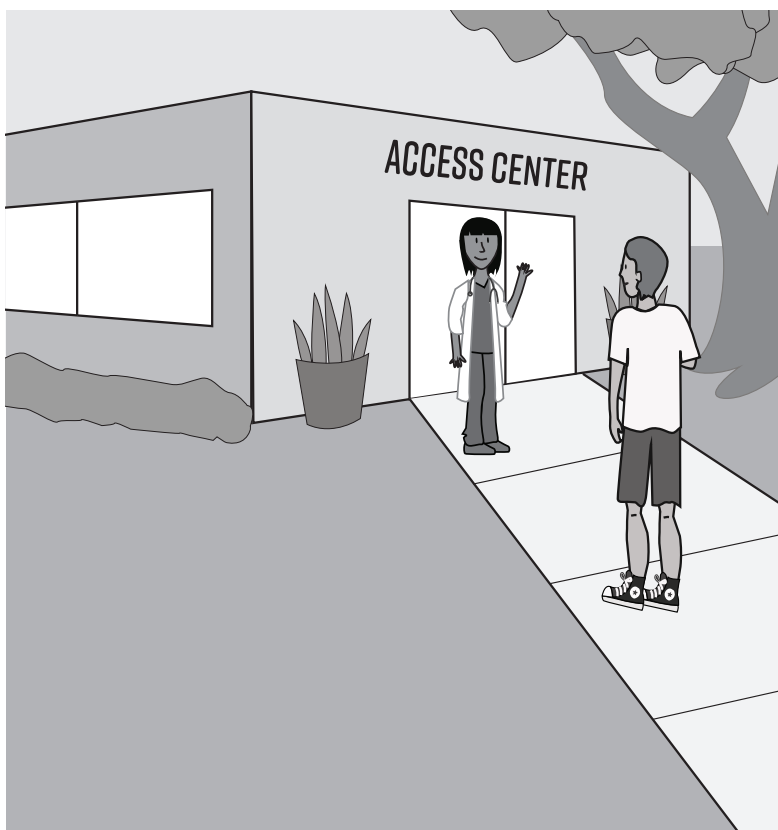

With access to information allowed by their profession, law enforcement and medical personnel conduct an informed conversation built on Jason's previous calls for help.

Frame 3

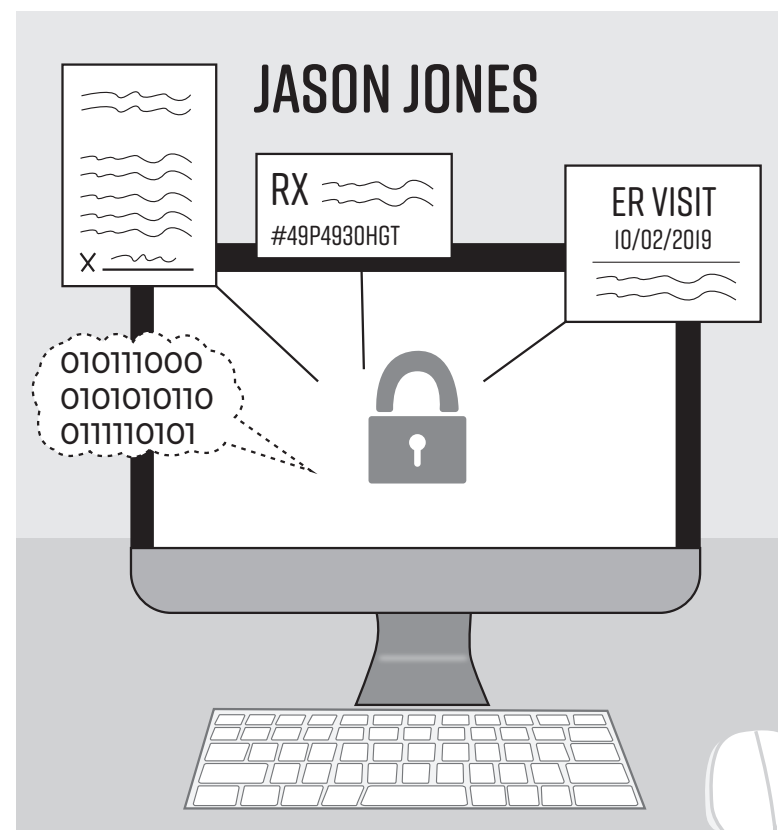

Jason is put at ease after receiving non-threatening communication, and is transported to the help he needs.

Frame 4

The personnel at the access center are able to provide Jason with coordinated services and document his visit for future secured sharing.

Frame 5

Data sharing allows health and social services to legally and ethically share client information to efficiently direct patients like Jason through progressive care.

Frame 6

Jason leaves feeling prepared to return home and confident that he is connected to community health and social services that will continue to support him.